MT. SALEM, LINCOLN COUNTY.

A little two-year-old child of Geo. McAnich died near Mount Salem a short time since.

After nearly nine years absence in a scorching climate, in a land of bright promises and uncertain performances, we once more make our bow to the readers and writers of the JOURNAL. We have but little to note, however, of news except that the people appear to be still in a feverish state of excitement over the election news.

The great changes which have taken place in our long exile have been sufficient to have astonished even Rip Van Winkle himself. Hills have grown into mountains and the land has changed into a lighter hue. So many new houses have been put up that it is sometimes difficult to tell whether we are in the town or country. Mount Salem, owing to superior rail facilities of surrounding towns has not grown much, but its leading spirit, Tom Jasper, seems to have prospered in a worldly point of view. From what we had learned we expected to find Middleburg on the decline, but found instead like everything else it had grown both in size and business facilities. With its fine surrounding scenery to one so long accustomed to frightful monotony, and its magnificent school building it is a place delightful to look upon. At Yosemite which sprang up by magic about a year ago, we found a town of several hundred inhabitants. It is the present terminus of the Cincinnati and Green River railroad and it is a great shipping point for all kinds of lumber and timber. It already contains one large hotel, 3 business houses, shingle machine, blacksmith shop &c. An average of 50 or 60 loaded wagons come in daily. Some 4 new mills near by have lately come in. Two daily hack lines also run from this place. But if great changes have taken place in the face of the country, equally astonishing ones have transpired among the people themselves. At Middleburg we found C. L. Holmer, who was a little wiry built man when we went away, had expanded into the respectable dimensions of a city alderman. John W. Wilcher whom we left an orphan boy struggling against fate, we found in fine circumstances and a leading business man. At Yosemite we found John W. McDaniel, once a poor school teacher, now one of the biggest merchants in the place. Many other great improvements and changes have taken place, but two tedious to mention.

Home and Farm.

To free hens from vermin sprinkle a little sulphur in the nest when the hen is set. The value of ensilage for food for sheep is said to be equal to grain in many respects.

When churning if butter "comes in speck" put in a lump of butter and they will gather to it.

The older and larger an animal becomes the more food it requires to make a pound of growth.

If you have a sick animal, say with a cold, give a mash of scalded "shorts," which often relieves.

The fodder from sweetcorn may be greatly increased by cutting up the stalks as soon as the ears are gathered.

Irrigation will not take the place of manure on land. Soil well fertilized richly repays the labor expended.

If you have stiff or noisy hinges about the place, pour on the top a little kerosene, which will soon find its way in.

A prominent poultry raiser says that 3,000 hens cared for in the proper manner will show an annual profit of $2,000.

Eggs packed in well-dried ashes, and so as not to touch each other, have been kept perfectly sweet for twelve months.

A quart of oat meal in a pail of water will freshen a horse after hard driving and prepare his stomach for more solid food.

STILL GRINDING AT THE OLD JOKE.—Again we are called on to chronicle one of those sad accidents that sometimes happen when all is joy and happiness. One of the brightest belles of Chicago was married last Wednesday, and after the wedding dinner prepared to start on a bridal tour. The carriage was at the door, and just as the happy pair were driving off some one said, "Throw a slipper after them." The bride's oldest sister, without thinking, stopped and pulled off her slipper and threw it at the departing carriage with all too deadly aim. It struck the driver, killing him instantly, and then, crushing through the roof of the vehicle, killing both of the newly wedded pair. In but a few brief moments all that was left alive of the happy ones was one of the horses. The sister is overwhelmed with anguish, and the carriage is a total wreck. —[Evansville Argus.]

We hope none of our citizens will further joke the colored people about being put back into slavery. It may cause some of the more ignorant to believe it, and get themselves and others into trouble. We want no one to talk about rebel soldiers being paid pensions. The rebel soldier fought for what he thought was right, if he was a true soldier, and ought not to be paid, even if he wanted to be. —[Carlele Mercury.]

TRY IT YOURSELF.

The proof of the pudding is not in chewing the string, but in having an opportunity to try the article yourself. McClellan & Stagg, the Druggists, have a free trial bottle of Dr. Ross's Cough and Lung Syrup for each and every one who is afflicted with Coughs, Colic, Asthma, Consumption or any Lung Affection.

Lawyer's Morals.

1. A lawyer ought to be a gentleman. His function as an attorney gives him no dispensation to disregard the ordinary rules of good manners, and the ordinary principles of decency and honor. He has no right to slander his neighbor, even if his neighbor be the defendant in a cause in which he appears for plaintiff. He has no right to bully or brow beat a witness in a cross examination, or artfully entrap that witness into giving false testimony. Whatever the privilege of the court may be the lawyer who is guilty of such practices in court is no gentleman out of court.

2. A lawyer ought not to lie. He may defend a criminal whom he knows to be guilty, but he may not say to the jury that he believes this criminal to be innocent. He may not in any way intentionally convey to the jury the impression that he believes the man to be innocent. He may not in his plea, pervert or distort the evidence so as to weaken the force or conceal the meaning of it. He is a sworn officer of the court, and his oath should bind him to the strictest veracity. It would be quixotic to expect him to assist his adversary, but his obligation to speak the truth out ranks every obligation that he owes to his client. It is notorious that some lawyers who think it scandalous to tell a falsehood out of court in any business transaction, lie shamelessly in court in behalf of their clients, and seem to think it a part of their professional duty. That bar of justice, before which by their professional obligations they are bound to the most stringent truthfulness is the very place where they seem to consider themselves absolved from the common law of veracity. So long as the legal mind is infected with this deadly heresy we need not wonder that our courts of justice often become the instruments of unrighteousness.

3. A lawyer ought not to sell his service for the promotion of injustice and knavery. Swindlers of all types are aided by lawyers in their depredations upon society. The mock broker who operates in Wall street and strips green country speculators of their hard earned gains by the most nefarious roguery, always has an able lawyer as an accomplice. The gentleman by whose agency a nest of these rascals was broken up says: "The great difficulty in stopping swindlers of this class is that the rascals make enough money to be able to employ the best of legal advice, and are, moreover, careful to do nothing which will render them liable to arrest." This is the testimony of a lawyer, Mr. Ralph Oakley, of New York. "The best of legal advice" can be had, then, in New York City for such purposes. It would be more difficult to believe this if its truth were not so often illustrated in the stupendous frauds and piracies of great corporations, all of which are carefully engineered by eminent lawyers. Our modern "buccaners"—our brave railroad wreckers are in constant consultation with eminent lawyers. They upbraidably have "the best of legal advice" in planning and executing their bold iniquities. —[Century.]

CONSOLATION FOR POLITICAL PARSONS.

For the consolation of the political parsons who labored so zealously to defeat Gov. Cleveland and rolled the scandal against him "as a sweet morsel under their tongues" and who feel that they could have done more, we print the story of Daniel Webster and his witness. In one of his cases Webster had a witness that testified rather strongly, but he lost his case. After the verdict the witness said to Webster: "If I had thought there was danger I could have testified much stronger than I did." "It would have done no good," said Webster, "as the jury did not believe a word that you did testify to." Moral: If you are going to tell a lie, tell a reasonable one.

Fraud of His Dog.

[Ansonia Conn. Sentinel.]

A transient guest sitting in the office of the Bassett house, Birmingham, a few evenings since, was interviewed by a bright little terrier dog well known hereabout for his smartness. The dog looked up in the gentleman's face so knowingly that the latter remarked: "Well, you are a bright little fellow. I guess you can do some tricks. What can you do?" At that the little terrier sat down on his haunches, folded his arms in the most approved style, and looked up as if to say: "How is that for a dog?" Well done," said the gentleman, "perhaps you can do some other things. What else can you do?" At that the little fellow deliberately marched out to the middle of the floor, stood upon his hind feet erect, and whirled twice around. "Pretty good, pretty good," said the traveler, "somebody must think a good deal of you. Can you walk?" At that the little dog stood himself erect and walked with great deliberation to his new friend, and putting his fore paw upon the latter's knee, looked up for the approval, which he got most heartily, the gentleman saying: "I know a man who has a dog that I think is not so smart as you that he values at $1,000." At this the owner of the dog, Mr. Charles Tracie, looked up from the paper that he had been reading, with the remark: "But I would not swap with him." The gentleman proved to have been a good deal of a dog fancier, having seen at one time or another the owner of nearly a hundred specimens, but had rarely seen one that seemed to understand everything that was said to him, as did this one. The peculiarity of the performance was that it was not routine. The dog seemed to have made his own selection from quite a large number of similar tricks, without his master's familiar voice or motions to direct.

The defeated republicans are wreaking sweet revenge on St. John by burning him and hanging him in effigy.

How He Got a Position.

"I applied for a position in a banking house in Wall street six months ago, and although I proved my competency they would not take me. I had been down on my luck and looked old and shabby. An idea struck me. I got up a new growth of hair with Parker's Hair Balsam, also a decent suit of clothes, applied again, and they took me in a minute." So wrote a clerk with $2,000 salary. The moral is plain. Parker's Hair Balsam gives a person a new face.

A War-West Sketch.

"You will have to go into the forward coach," said the conductor, as he tore off a coupon from a second class ticket. "But the tobacco smoke is so bad and I have such a headache," said the little woman timidly, and the pale face was raised pleadingly. "Can't help it, ma'am. Rules of the road require passengers having second class tickets to ride in the forward coach," was the uncompromising reply as he passed on. "Hang your rules," blurted out a big man with a fierce mustache. "Stay where you are, madam. You look tired. Here, let me turn this seat over so you can lie down. Put your head on this grip. Here's my overcoat, put it so," and he had her nicely tucked away before she could object. "Your ticket? All O. K. Take mine, it's to the same place—first class, unlimited. I love to smoke. Always ride in the smoker, anyhow." And he went forward. Dinner was announced in the dining car and the big man came bustling in and insisted on her having dinner. She objected, evidently thinking it improper to receive so much attention from a stranger. "Kate Adams," read the big man, looking at the name on her valise. "Not Dick Adams' wife? You are? Well, by—! Why, come here, I'll kiss you my girl! Dick's my youngest brother! Why, I was just going to see him. He'd get that broke, and kinder wanted to set him up again!" And the big man looked so happy and the little sister-in-law so pleased that the passenger's forgot to kill the "straw" lunatic that was asking a vote of the passengers on the Presidential question for a daily. —[Minnesota Bazar.]

A Whale's Adventure.

[Cor. London Paper.]

As a matter of curiosity and unique experience in connection with the working of submarine telegraph cables, I beg leave to hand you some extracts from the letters from our manager on the West Coast of South America, and also from the Captain of our cable-repairing steamer. The extracts go to show that not only is it bad for a whale to attack a cable, but so perfect have the appliances for the repair of cables now become, that no matter where or in what depth of water they may be broken, they can almost always be repaired as surely and as quickly in mid-ocean as a horse can be shod in a blacksmith's shop. Judging from the extracts it would seem that the whale voluntarily attacked the cable, and, having had a free fight with it, paid for his temerity with his life, for he was held prisoner for seven days and then mangled into death. The Captain of our repairing steamer writes: "Having picked up twenty-one knots of cable, and while continuing picking up, an immense whale came up to the bows entangled in the cable. It seemed to be about seventy feet in length. In its struggles to get free the cable cut right into its side, the whole of its entrails coming out and great streams of blood. In its last dying struggle it parted the cable on the bowheaves and floated to windward of the steamer. The cable was twisted up in the form of a wire rope for about two fathoms, and in six different parts it had made appearances of having been bitten through sufficiently to stop all communication. There is no doubt the whale has been the cause of the interruption." Our manager also writes: "The cause of the breakage of the cable, as has been pointed out to you in Captain Morton's report, was a huge whale which became entangled in the turns of the cable, and was held prisoner for seven days; the interruption was unfortunate, but it is at least satisfactory to know that the cable did not give way naturally, and that where picked up the sheathing, yarn and core were found to be in an almost perfect state of preservation. In fact looked almost as good as on the day the cable was first laid."

She Didn't Take the Ring.

[Philadelphia Press.]

A young lady who moves in very good society returned from the seashore yesterday in a very indignant frame of mind. She made a call on a West Walnut street family, and there met a half-dozen girl friends, to whom she explained the cause of her indignation. "I was on a board walk about 7 o'clock in the evening," she said, "and a great, horrid man with a black mustache said 'hm.' I paid no attention, and what did he do but turn square round and say, 'I'd like to kiss you.' Of course, I paid no attention, and then he came closer and said, 'I'd give this diamond ring for a kiss,' at the same time drawing a beautiful ring from his finger."

"And did he kiss you and then refuse to give up the ring?" queried the girls in chorus.

"Goodness sake, no!" was the reply. "I felt so angry and hurt that I walked away without saying a word. At any rate, the ring was a solitaire, and you all know that clusters are the only correct thing to wear nowadays."

"He was a beast," said the girls, "and you were perfectly right."
